What does the term “locum tenens” mean?

“Locum Tenens” is a Latin phrase which translates to mean “to hold a place.” A locum tenens physician is one who temporarily fills a gap in medical staff or fills in for another physician while he or she is out on vacation, maternity leave or professional training.

How are locum tenens physicians typically used?

A locum tenens physician is one who temporarily fills a gap in medical staff or fills in for another physician while he or she is out on vacation, maternity leave or professional training. In addition, the physician shortage has prompted many hospitals and practices to bring in locum tenens physicians. By some estimates, more than 75% of hospitals use locum tenens physicians as part of their staffing mix to maintain service levels.

What are the financial advantages of locum tenens staffing?

What are the financial advantages of locum tenens staffing?

Locum tenens staffing can be used as a permanent strategy for physician recruitment and retention—a way to lower costly physician attrition. By the same token, locum tenens physicians can help reduce the load on permanent staff and prevent burnout. This can help maintain patient satisfaction levels and the brand value of hospitals and physician practices.

Can hospitals and practices be reimbursed for locum tenens services?

Yes, in many cases. The Medicare Claims Processing Manual allows hospitals to bill for locum tenens professional fees using the absent physician’s billing information as long as certain conditions are met. Medicaid billing guidelines typically mirror Medicare rules, although they are subject to individual state requirements. In addition, many private insurance payers allow providers to bill for locum tenens services for a period of time.

Why should my facility consider LocumConnections?

Unlike outside staffing firms, we operate in the clinical healthcare space. From our parent organization based in Atlanta, and since 1998, we have had the direct experience of developing and supporting physician practices that serve hospitals today in more than a dozen states. As a result, our leaders are physicians and executives who have experience and know-how in physician healthcare management.

Why does this direct healthcare experience matter?

Our roots grew from actual case studies of clinical recruitment and staffing success in mitigating challenges with hospital partners in the temporary contract hospitalist sector. That direct and personal experience facing modern-day healthcare issues, combined with veteran leadership, client development, and recruitment teams, make LocumConnections unique in understanding what it takes to solve physician staff deficiencies, as well as the impact it has on clinical practice models. The result? Hospitals get more than placeholders from LocumConnections, and gain strategic value from the recruiting investment.
